Alternative energy trends and perspectives in the USA/Перспективы развития альтернативной энергетики в ресурсной политике США

The fact that energy of the future must have an ecological orientation and be aimed at minimization of risk, defence of climate, providing of steady development has never been in doubt. The United States has the potential to lead the global transition to energy of the future— renewable energy. It has some of the best wind, solar, geothermal, hydro and biomass resources in the world. Yet these possibilities remain grossly under-utilized. In this regard, the report considers the specifics of energy supply in the USA, the advantages and disadvantages of conventional and alternative energy and also scrutinizes the development of renewable energy sources in America during the XXIth century, including its perspectives.

The present topological research of 18-20th century structurally-bound quotations, selected from the Little Oxford Dictionary of Quotations, and their Russian equivalents has been conducted to examine their variant/invariant functional, semantic aspects and particularly structural ones which determine the ontology of these quotations in British and Russian discourse. The results show that there are a number of structurally-bound quotations used in both linguocultures in an almost identical way.

A comparative study of Russian and English body languages/ Особенности невербальной коммуникации в англоязычной и русской культурах

This project analyses the similarities and differences in the body languages of Russian and English. Although there is significant overlap between the two gestural corpuses, certain gestures may be used far more frequently in one language than the other, and the contexts in which they are used may differ. We find that there are certain gestures which are exclusive to one language and are thus untranslatable. From a semiotic perspective, gestures are signifiers, not signifieds. Thus, one must also consider, when comparing Russian and English, different emotional, and therefore expressive, approaches to the world which, in turn, find expression in different gestures. A final interesting note is the conversion of physical signs (gestures) into verbal signs (words), and how Russian and English lexica turn gestures into set phrases.

The Canadian national identity 'at a crossroads': ideological disputes in the last third of the 19th century/ Канадская национальная идентичность «на распутье»: идеологические споры последней трети XIX в.

In the last third of the 19th century, dynamically developing Canada (British North America) became one of the most significant components of the British Empire. The foundation of the Federal Union gave a higher profile to the complicated issue of the Canadian national identity. This report's aim is to figure out the effect of ideological debates between conservative British imperialism proponents and liberal pro-American continentalism supporters on the national identity formation by the beginning of the 20th century. The research carried out within the framework of historical approach supplemented with politico-textual analysis, revealed the positive contribution of both ideological trends into the process of consolidating the Canadian society and its self-determination in the system of international relations.

The Canadian version of British imperialism served as the axiological set of tenets and benchmarks underlying the external policy of the Federal Union. The Canadian government headed by J. A. Macdonald was striving to undertake various diplomatic actions in order to transform the 'outdated' model of relations between the metropolis and dominions inside the British Empire into the Imperial Federation. On the other hand, continentalists, the brightest representative of whom was G. Smith, were denying the traditional political and cultural connections with the UK and advocating the idea of complete integration with the USA. Thus, the first ideological line was the specific way of the Canadian national pride expression in the form of Imperial Federation project, whereas the second one urged the Canadian citizens, who were unwilling to integrate with the USA, to realize the commonality of their historical destiny and identify themselves as a distinct nation.

Dr. Jeffrey K. Olick's reconsideration of collective memory studies (the University of Virginia)/ Новый подход к изучению коллективной памяти: исследования проф. Джеффри К. Олика (университет штата Виргиния)

Jeffrey Olick is an American sociologist, a Professor of Sociology and History and Chair of the Sociology Department at the University of Virginia. He is famous for reviewing the concept of "collective memory", originated in France and first described by the French sociologist and philosopher Maurice Halbwachs. Though Professor Olick is mainly focusing on the case of Germany and the socio-political problems it faced when reviving the country in the second part of the XXth century, the ideas and approach he develops in respect of the collective memory concept can be applied widely to analyze the "memorial climate" of the different periods of the civilized past.

Philosophical perspective on teacher education in the UK/ Философский ракурс педагогического образования в Великобритании

In the report philosophical perspective on teacher education has been outlined taking into consideration reforms in this field in the UK. Recent years have seen a concerted and systematic move towards a school-led system of initial teacher training in England where role of universities, and particularly their part in engaging new teachers with theory, has been radically challenged. Different models of teaching (technology, craft and profession) have been examined. The model of teaching as profession has been justified based on the Aristotle's distinction between techne, epistema and phronesis. By doing so a clear place for theory in teacher education has been identified while the worth of accounts of the practical wisdom of teachers has been recognized as well. The role of the university as better places than schools to promote some kinds of theoretical engagement necessary to good teaching has been highlighted.

The organisation of exhibition space in museums of contemporary art in the USA and Russia: specificities and trends / Организация выставочного пространства в музеях современного искусства в США и России: особенности и общие тенденции

Nowadays the concept of contemporary art museum is changing: museums have outgrown themselves, becoming a cultural and creative centre, which educates the viewer and prepares him to meet art. The main part of a museum is still an exhibition, and there are different views of how to design it to express an artist's idea better. This report will try to classify the ways of organising exhibition halls in museums of contemporary art in the USA and Russia identifying their peculiar features and general trends.

The origin of American aesthetics: the ideology of globalization / Происхождение американской эстетики: идеология глобализации

Modernization has traditionally worn a western face. Western societies in general and the USA in particular have conventionally been portrayed as “developed” and “advanced” societies, implying that they offer a model that will, over time, be accepted by all other countries. From «American gothic» to «Memphis», from Beat-generation poetry to postmodernism, from Frank Sinatra music to Taylor Swift - all those artifacts (or items) are forming the so-called worldwide pop-culture, which leads to globalization and Americanization (or Westernization), where the dominating culture of economically and politically powerful USA spreads (and may potentially inflict a heavy blow to the identity of national cultures).

The national idea of the United States and its designation through a triad of national interests of Americans / Национальная идея США и её обозначение через триаду национальных интересов американцев

Americans usually refrain from using the concept of "national idea". It is argued that in the United States, in contrast to totalitarian countries, there is no state ideology. However, according to many researchers of the way of life of Americans, since A. de Tocqueville, it is difficult to find a more ideological society than the United States, the "American dream" being a persuasive example. In many ways, it is this "dream" that has created America, not only as the main geopolitical center of the modern world, but also as a legislator of values.

The generation of the postmodern epoch in Irwin Welsh's novels/ Проблемы поколения эпохи постмодернизма в романах Ирвина Уэлша

In contemporary literature, Irwin Welsh is perhaps one of the most popular Scottish novel writers in the genre of counterculture. His name is firmly associated with the evolution of Western youth culture in the late twentieth century. He is the author of several novels that raise such burning themes as unemployment, drugs, the life of workers in the outskirts of Edinburgh, the post-punk generation, or the "generation X". He subjects the vices of modern society to sharp criticism, showing life as it is. In his works, he reflected all the tragedy of the younger generation in the conditions of postmodernity, globalization as well as the collapse of general cultural values. The purpose of the report is to consider Welsh's works from a cultural point of view, to analyse the conflict between the individual and society, when society collapses, and the person tries to find a way out of the sickly state.

The struggle with monuments in the USA: revolt against racism or forgetting history / Борьба с памятниками в США: протест расизму или забвение истории

Recently, the issue of the attitude to its historical past has become pressing for the USA. In 2017 in New Orleans, Baltimore, Durham, and Dallas monuments to General Robert Lee, one of the main leaders of the South Army during the Civil War in the United States, were dismantled. The demolition of monuments was motivated by the fact that the confederates are associated with racism and discrimination. These occasions have caused a wave of protests, during which the largest alt-right and neo-nazi militant gathering in contemporary history of the USA was held. Conflicts between supporters and opponents of the monuments' dismantling have entailed human casualties and caused stormy discussions of the issue among the US society. What does American society think about this problem? What are the best solutions for this issue at the moment? Is this attitude acceptable to the historical memory of your country? Searching for answers to these questions is the main purpose of this report.

Zombie is a mystical character of modern mass culture. A zombie is understood as a fantastically animated corpse or an alive person who has completely lost control of himself and his body or who obeys someone's orders. David John Chalmers (born April 20, 1966) is an Australian philosopher specializing in the philosophy of consciousness. As evidence of his ideas, David Chalmers puts forward a hypothesis of a "philosophical zombie", which in its appearance and behavior is a normal person, but does not have consciousness. He argues that since the existence of a zombie is logically possible (i.e. logically consistent), the concepts of consciousness have not yet been fully explained in terms of physical properties

The report discusses the recent research of Dr. Alison Hill (the University of Cambridge, Philosophy and Fellow in Philosophy at St John's College) in this field. In order for your actions to be moral you must do the right things for the right reasons. Using your moral understanding to make moral judgments is perfect. Alison Hills says in the paper that there is different reason why it is better to be aware why your action is right. So, being a moral person is not just doing the right action. «It is about being responsive to morality in all the ways that are available to you».

Folk music of maori – native population of New Zealand – is very diverse and totally different from the European music, which we are used to listening. The maori music reflects archaic, poetical and very unusual culture of this people, their mythology and traditions, which strongly influenced history, literature and art of New Zealand. Oriori are songs for children, so they are often associated with lullabies, but they never were used to make children sleep. They were composed by parents or ancestors of a child for him to study or to express feelings. Lyrics of oriori are long, rich of sence and they contain the information about the origin of a child, his ancestors, famous battles, myths about the arrival of maori to New Zealand, curses of enemies and likewise.

Often called the "Mother of Parliaments», the British parliament has stood up well to the passing of time and is respected as the most ancient parliament in the world. There have been a great number of different traditions which are usually contained in the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders are written rules formulated by each House to regulate its own proceedings. They cover, for example, the behaviour of MPs and members of the House of Lords during debates, and rules relating to committees. Nevertheless, many parliamentary procedures have developed over the centuries and are not written in the Standing Orders. They are known as "custom and practice." Today a lot of these customs look quite strange and odd.

“Introducing the USA to Russian high school students: elective flipped classroom course “American History and Culture”/ Знакомство учеников старшей школы с историей и культурой США: элективный курс на базе методики перевернутый класс.

Nowadays, one of the aims of language education is to promote students' sociocultural competence. Although most school textbooks include some information on history and culture of the English-speaking countries, there is an increasing demand for a more comprehensive study of the UK and the US to fulfill the needs of modern language education. The report is concerned with the importance of introducing American history and culture to Russian high school students within supplementary school education. The study under consideration is aimed at developing and testing the program of an elective course “History and Culture of the USA”, which is based on the flipped classroom methodology, relatively new to Russian education.

second half of the XX and the beginning of the XXI centuries”/ Динамика развития образа русского человека в военных фильмах американского кинематографа второй половины XX и начала XXI вв.

Although cinematography is a relatively young form of art, it can be considered an extremely powerful tool of psychological and ideological influence on a viewer. Cinematography displays not only heroes with their distinctive national features, but also their habitat creating vivid images and everlasting stable stereotypes. The basis of this research lies in a theoretical analysis of existing stereotypes: their forms and functions in intercultural communication, relations between ideology and cinematography when creating an image of a nation or a country. To obtain the result in determining dynamics of the development of the image of a Russian person in American military films, 6 criteria were worked out to select appropriate film material and analytic grid was created to investigate the image of a Russian character. Basing on the criteria, 5 military films were chosen for the research.

English)”/ Библейские имена собственные в фразеологии (на материале современного американского варианта английского).

The United States is a cosmopolitan, multicultural and polyconfessional country. People practicing different religions do not always know the contents of sacred books of other confessions. Although certain plots from the Holy Scripture have become the basis of idiomatic units. So, non-Christians cannot comprehend the implications of the phrases. The subject of the scientific research is a bibleism as a linguistic and cultural phenomenon while the object is the frequency of bibleisms usage, especially containing proper names. The purpose of the investigation is identifying the position of bibleisms in modern American English. The main goals of the research is detecting bibleisms in American belles-lettres, films and newspaper articles and estimating the rate of bibleisms usage in the above-mentioned sources. The analysis of the frequency usage of bibleisms has shown that scriptural phraseological units are often used in the analyzed sources while bibleisms with proper nouns occur rather seldom.

As is widely known, English has reached the status of a global language and is nowadays used as a lingua franca. It is labeled “Global English” or sometimes even “Global Englishes”, as it has, in fact, transformed into numerous distinct varieties, including Chinese English, Japanese English, Spanish English etc. English that is used nowadays as a means of intercultural communication is strikingly different from the English that once originated in Great Britain. The aim of this study was to explore different varieties of English as an International language (EIL) in terms of their pronunciation features. This study proves that English as an International Language is rightfully owned and strongly influenced by speakers from all over the world. It no longer belongs to a particular country, nation or culture, and does not have “a native speaker”.

The theme of our research is the reflection of Eastern civilization in English-speaking countries’ culture. The East is an ancient and significant area of development and origin of culture, religion and philosophy. This region has had an important impact on the world course of history. The centuries-old closeness of the East created around him an aura of mysticism and mystery. Europeans and other western countries have always been interested in the civilizations of the East. Expeditions, campaigns and wars - much connects the two great civilizations of Europe and Asia. Undoubtedly, with mutual influence these regions formed their own vision for each other. Our research is aimed at identifying the features of the reflection of the civilization of the east, namely India and China in the cultural system of English-speaking countries. For examples, films of European filmmakers will be considered, an analysis of which will show certain features of this same vision of the East through the eyes of English-speaking part of the world.

The report is dedicated to the life and activities of American anarchist and feminist Voltarine de Cleyre and her concept of “anarchism without adjectives”. De Cleyre became famous during the period of American labor movement when the ideas of anarchy were often heard during the strikes. Voltarine was one of the public figures who fought for the rights of workers and women and against the arbitrariness of the authorities. She demonstrated a high degree of tolerance to the variants of the anarchistic ideology and recognized all methods that were aimed to increase the human freedoms and to reduce government control. She united them on the basis of common anti-authoritarian ideals and called herself an “anarchist without adjectives”. De Cleyre was the first anarchist who raised the issue of sexual violence in marriage. In her essay "Sex Slavery" she asked a question to which the Western system found an answer only at the end of the 20th century: is it permissible for a husband to abuse his wife only because their union is bound by law? Such a question, posed during the period of brutal censorship, could be asked only by a feminist, but her position was also anarchistic, because she transferred the principle of anarchism to private life.

As we know, a caste is a segmentation of society into groups whose membership was determined by birth. The most illustrative paradigmatic ethnographic example of it is the caste system in India. It has origins in ancient India and continues to exist nowadays. Great Indian civilization developed gradually through the ages, the life of people living in this country has changed too. What can we identify by exploring a social structure and by comparing different periods of time? Is human's belonging to a certain caste a very significant point in modern India or not? All these questions will be studied in this research.

The report highlights the problem of communication between two parts of UK: Scotland and England, between two great nations that now are united. Now we can see that different traditions and customs are becoming very important for Scots and it is the new reason for them to separate and to become free and independent. Also it shows social differences, important and actual problems, the history of English-Scottish cooperation, conflicts and peaceful interaction. The main theme of this report is the situation that has began 5 centuries ago and now is still actual. That is why in my report I want to show the main differences between both cultures, especially in the sphere of language.

The research is devoted to the analysis of the contemporary middle class in the USA. The study of the American middle class is extremely important for understanding the U.S. social and economic structure. The U.S. middle class has its own specific features, values and income level which are hardly suitable for social models (especially the Marxist class model) describing societies of other countries. Middle class members having relatively high living standards, secure economic positions and work autonomy, high level of education, work and life experience play the leading role in the economic and political life of the USA. The majority of voters in the USA associate themselves with the middle class. Writers, teachers, journalists, editors and other people forming the U.S. mass consciousness also belong to the middle class. Most societal trends in the U.S. originate from the middle class.

These ideas form a specific concepts, which people use to set their goals in life. In the USA people believe in a concept called “American dream”. This notion has the great history that needs to be researched as deeper as it can be. The concept of “American dream” has been evolving for centuries. All this time it took part in different spheres of people's life: politics, economics, culture and etc. Eventually, we should pay attention to such kind of concepts which help people to orient their life in a better way.

The abstract: The topic of the report, of course, is relevant, since Alaska is the most extensive in the area of the US state, which is famous for its natural riches. On the territory of Alaska there are: more than 3 million lakes and 3 thousand rivers - the Yukon River, the 3rd along the length in the USA; 100 thousand glaciers (5% of the surface of Alaska); The highest peak in North America is McKinley Peak; about 70 active volcanoes. Despite its geographical uniqueness, many Russian students do not know its true history, often guided only by stereotypes.

The report provides an in-depth survey of the history of Alaska, showing the demographic situation taking place in Alaska (population, its density). An interesting consideration is the etymology of the origin of Alaska. Particular attention is paid to the geography of this state, affecting the urban dimension - the largest cities.

The focus of our consideration is the interaction of the higher education system, i.e. university (as a social phenomenon) and urban space. In our opinion, this interaction has two vectors. The first vector reflects the university as a part of urban space that can change the image of this region. While the second vector represents the university (in some cases - universities) as a center of the formation and development of the city: the whole life of the city is built around the university, business structures, power and citizens are united around. A vivid example of the second vector is the distribution of the so-called university cities in the US.

Gender inequality in modern America / Гендерное неравенство в современной Америке.

In the United States, as in many other societies, gender relationships are changing and inequalities between men and women are discussed in virtually every sphere: at work, at home and in public affairs. But plain facts show that gender gaps and inequalities persist, even in the face of social and economic transformations and social movements.

How can this be? Even in advanced industrial nations, why do gender inequalities prove so difficult to overcome? Research shows that the answers lie, above all, in the ways people think of gender as they relate to one another. In their daily lives, people see gender as taken for granted in managing their relationships with others. Interpersonal negotiations are constantly influenced by gender stereotypes - and that, in turn, causes older ways of thinking about men and women and their relationships to be involved in all spheres of life including even very new kinds of tasks and social settings.

Intangible incentives for staff in the UK organizations / Нематериальное стимулирование персонала в британских организациях

The report is devoted to the study of means and methods of stimulating personnel in the UK. The system of means of motivation consists of two main blocks: material and non-material incentives. The report emphasizes that intangible incentives play an increasingly important role at the present time. Intangible incentives are aimed at increasing the loyalty of company employees while reducing the cost of compensating employees for their work. The so-called analytical wage systems, which take into account the complexity of the work, qualifications of performers, physical efforts, working conditions, etc., are the most common in the practice of British companies. Promotion in the form of gifts is widespread in British firms. Staff rotation is also a fairly common method of non-material motivation. Systems of motivation of workers employed by industrial firms through their promotion to service take into consideration personal qualities and length of service.

Self-management and self-organization as the main principles of "teal organizations"/ Самоуправление и самоорганизация как основные принципы «бирюзовых организаций»

Teal organizations seem to be "organizations of the future", in which instead of the usual managers the principles of coaching and self-management act, instead of the usual KPI, the main indicators are values.

"Teal organizations" are enterprises driven by vivid meanings. Personality of each employee strives to become a part of the whole, to maintain harmonious relations with all. For people who work within these organizations the relationships are more important than the results. The stages of the decision-making process go from the bottom up.

The most important feature of "teal organizations" is the opportunity to overcome the problem of unequal distribution of power through an organizational structure in which no one has superiority over others. Instead, teamwork is used, based on mutual trust and universal responsibility. Each employee has access to all information and is involved in an open exchange. The employee appoints the employee independently, based on the basic salary of his peers.

In general, such a view on the development of organizations and the introduction of the designated methods of people management will make it possible to form integral ones that meet not only the interests of owners and managers, but also the needs and desires of ordinary workers and organizations.

Brands define the status of the person in society, his social prestige and for this reason society conforms to those rules which brands establish. But each brand possesses information which allows the person to form knowledge about it. And knowledge in a consequence forms the social environment which unites people with similar views on life depending on possession of these or those brands. #### Migration in New Zealand – a problem that is worth mentioning / Миграция в Новой Зеландии – проблема, стоящая упоминания

Migration processes are a complex phenomenon that has grown into a real problem in many European countries. These processes are of scientific interest, being an urgent problem that requires solution. Studying migration with the example of New Zealand and its active cooperation with Australia on issues of immigrants will help to observe unique phenomenon connected with overcoming the problems of globalization.

This study focuses on the migration policy of New Zealand and Australia, as well as the cooperation of New Zealand with Australia as a partner in migration issues and as a rival in the economy and the allocation of resources, including labour. After all, labour is one of the main causes of migration movements in the Pacific.

The special attention is given to the migration issues in Pacific countries and their impact on the migration in New Zealand as a part of the Pacific.

Brexit - the economic and political consequences for the UK. Sociological analysis / Брексит –экономические и политические последствия для Великобритании. Социологический анализ.

Britain's exit from the European Union (abridged by Brexit) is the main political goal of the conservative opposition and some individuals (nationalists and eurosceptics) in Britain. During the referendum in 2016, 52% of voters voted for the exit of Great Britain from the European Union. The world public was shocked by the results of the vote, because many political scientists predicted quite a different outcome of the referendum. Despite the fact that the results of the referendum were of a recommendatory character, the British Prime Minister of the day Theresa May announced that she plans to launch Brexit on March 29, 2018. Political and social experts differently assess the possible consequences of Britain's exit from the European Union, emphasizing both positive and negative sides in this process. The report focuses on the review of this current policy and economic consequences for the British society.

Is it possible to tell about Singapore mentioning only 3 features? Yes, it is, as Singapore is considered to be one of the world's most expensive, cleanest and technologically advanced megalopolises. But we cannot tell anything more than that. Let's try to look deeper and see Singapore in various aspects; learn about local ethnic groups, their traditions and ways of coexistence in the same country. We will also learn about political and innovational tendencies of this exotic country.

This study analyses sociolinguistic trends that are considered to be significant in social life in Canada. The research highlights multicultural peculiar properties, which led to bilingualism in this country. Special attention is paid to the practice of using French as the second official language. The paper demonstrates how Canadians use different languages in their everyday life, characterizes linguistic situation in Canada, especially in its province – Quebec. In the report there is reference to the quiet revolution and its effect on the language in this country. This research gives differentiation between spoken French in Quebec and Canadian French. It also illustrates the changing linguistic landscape of Quebec, defines archaisms, neologisms, borrowings and other important tendencies observed in the language. The report provides sociological statistic data to support its main statements.

Role of the myth of development and defense of democracy in US foreign policy of the 1910-1920s / Роль мифа о распространении и защите демократии во внешней политике США в 1910-1920х гг.

The USA was a very young state 100 years ago with its domestic problems and issues, active actors arguing about fields to expand first and ways of developing the immature country. That is the main reason why most of US citizens supported isolationism — they preferred concentrating on their inner issues to active participation in international ones. However, WWI demonstrated how important and profitable the participation of the USA in European politics was. Therefore, US government managed to justify active foreign politics with the myth of development and defense of democracy.

Территориальные конфликты между государствами в современном мире: анализ и выявление закономерностей на примере Фолклендской войны / Territorial conflicts between states in the modern world, analysis and identification of laws: a case study of the Falklands War

The current world is contradictory and deceptive. We have economic crises, environmental problems, the fight between the rich and the poor. However, I would like to highlight and analyze the problem that has existed since the birth of society and the state – the war. The whole life of mankind can be described as war with each other. British scientists, analyzing world history, found that if you add up all the years without war, it turns out that humanity lived peacefully on the planet only for 10 years. Military conflicts are not the same and had different reasons for entering the acute phase, but it should be noted that one of the reasons that was the original and may always lead humanity to its death is territorial contradictions. It is the struggle for resources and territories that caused many disasters and casualties. Moreover, today, with the emergence of new types of weapons I can only imagine what will happen to humanity. In this regard, it is necessary to explore the wars of the recent past, which used modern weapons to find ways and means to prevent such conflicts. One of the best examples of such a military conflict is The Falklands War. In my report, I will briefly analyze this war and find some geopolitical patterns that might solve the problem of such conflicts.

A study of preconditions for nationalism in the United States/ К вопросу о предпосылках возникновения национализма в США

Nowadays there is a question about the emergence of nationalism. The ideas of nationalism arise when the indigenous population, unsatisfied with the economy or politics, begins to blame the non-indigenous population. That means the preconditions are subjective. The methods of overcoming these phenomena depend on the culture of society, the development of democratic institutions, and the socio-economic situation of the country. However, the main feature of nationalism is the division of society into "us" and "others" and the establishment of rules for them. This situation may lead to the formation of the idea of a "supernation" and the permission to destroy dissent. Unfortunately, the ideas of nationalism are manifested in the unstable economic and political situations.

Introduction into the old and the new in the American crime/ Преступность в США: старые и новые проблемы

Crime has been around us for centuries. Every day when we open a newspaper or turn on the TV almost everything we read or hear is about criminals and their illegal actions. More than half of all crimes in the world are committed in the USA. Some kinds of crimes are as old as the human society (such as stealing, pick pocketing, vandalism, assault or domestic violence, murder and manslaughter); others are a more recent phenomenon. With the development of the modern world new kinds of crime appear, so it is not surprising that crime rate is still high. Armed robbery of stores and banks, hacking into computers (so called “cyber frauds”), armed attacks on schools – all of them are new tendencies, which expand in the USA. Our aim is to investigate into the reason of the old and the new crimes and consider how to escape further influence of «criminal disease».

World supremacy dispute, history and modern time: what will happen with the USA? / Спор за мировое господство – история и современность: что ждет США?

This work considers an acute issue of what country will be the global hegemon of world politics in the next 30 years. Samuel Huntington supposed that the 21th century would be the century of Asia revival. However, we can see that this forecast has some disadvantages. Zbigniew Brzezinski said in the 1990s that the USA was a world superpower, but he also agreed with Samuel Huntington – he predicted that the world hegemony of the USA would come to the end in the 2010s. What can we see now? Only the situation, which opposes all these forecasts. The work includes the modern analysis of the correlation of country forces. Joseph Nay distinguished 3 levels of power – military, economic and transnational. The work considers the main political actors in all these levels. In addition, it determines the structural constraints of Asia’s development. The conclusion, which is made in the work after considering modern theories, is as follows: the USA is to keep the dominance in world order in the next 30 years and may be more.

On November 9, 2016, the day after Donald Trump was elected president of the United States, in reaction to Trump's election campaign and political views, and his defeat of female presidential nominee Hillary Clinton, Teresa Shook of Hawaii created a Facebook event and invited friends to march on Washington in protest. Most of the rallies were aimed at Donald Trump immediately following his inauguration, largely due to statements that he had made and positions that he had taken, which were regarded by many as anti-women or otherwise offensive. Colonial countries have always been trying to obtain independence from the hegemonic state. Let us remember the example of North America after the war with England in the end of the 18th century. At the first glance at the results of The American Revolutionary War, it seems that everything changed for the better in American society that differed from British one deeply. However, revolutions in general are not able to avouch calm and fair reality straight away (that has been confirmed by many authors). Has the American revolution come to its end yet? This question was raised in one of the theoretical concepts created by Thomas Skidmore. He denied the completion of it because of the existence of sheer inequality in social and economic spheres in the 19th century. Which ways of solving these problems were suggested by him? Are the following questions still topical and urgent in the contemporary American society? In our report, we will try to answer these questions.

The cult of a healthy lifestyle reigns in New Zealand. Being non-sportive is not fashionable and not cool here. It is clearly expressed among young people. New Zealand has been promoting a healthy, harmonious way of life and interest in sports among all its citizens for a long time. Nowadays both mass and extreme sports have steadily gained popularity in the country. It is Rugby that appears to be the most popular sport among New Zealanders. Rugby is a national sport in New Zealand, and it is popular among the New Zealand society. Moreover, many New Zealanders associate it with their national identity. Besides rugby, New Zealanders like to play cricket or golf. All these types of sport compete for the right to be called a national sport.

What place does sport take in the life of New Zealanders? What kinds of sport are the most popular in New Zealand? What kind of support does the state provide to sports organizations? I am going to answer these questions in the report.

We often hear about people's desire to solve world hunger, or to be able to feed the world and help alleviate the suffering associated with it. However, meaningful long-term alleviation to hunger is rooted in the alleviation of poverty, as poverty leads to hunger. World hunger is a terrible symptom of world poverty. If efforts were only directed at providing food, or improving food production or distribution, then the structural root causes that create hunger, poverty and dependency would remain. So, while continuous effort, resources and energies are deployed to relieve hunger through these technical measures, the political causes require political solutions as well. Therefore, the main issue of our work will be to understand the essence of the problem and the ways of solving it.

The report deals with the problem of defining the cultural heritage of the Falklands war between Great Britain and Argentina. The word "cultural" is used here in a wide set of meanings in order to determine all the results of human activity. Therefore, the main aim of this report is to show all the influence of this conflict on different spheres of human activity whether it is music, political ideas or world's military theory. The object of this research is a number of consequences of the Falklands war. The subject of this research is the value of these consequences to the world's culture and, especially, to the British culture and the Argentina's one. In the research, we have used a following set of scientific methods: studying different public resources (books, films, articles on the Internet, etc.), descriptive analysis, and the method of interviewing the experts from different spheres, which are relevant to our research issue. The conducted study has allowed us to make a following conclusion: despite the shortness and the little scale of the Falklands war, it has made a great influence on different spheres of both the British and the Argentinian cultures, and it definitely continues to affect them.

It shows that the United Kingdom is likely to be disintegrated with Scotland and Northern Ireland intending to be independent states. In addition, this report touches the issue of the future destiny of the EU where a "core" Europe will be centered around Germany that is reasonably integrated politically and economically while the broader European Union is regarded as a failed political and economic experiment. Finally, this research has revealed the tendency of the shift from globalism to nationalism in international relations that leads to more fragmented international architecture, standards and security relations.

The single transferable vote (STV) is recognized by election researchers as "the best" electoral system as it totally meets demands of democracy. Nevertheless, some disadvantages are unavoidable. The system is difficult to be made use of because of the voting process complexity. Therefore, the range of countries, where the STV is applicable is not wide. Voting practices in Australia and Ireland represent the STV in different ways: in the former case, it keeps functioning through the current party system, and the latter one shows its functioning with the essential help of the electorate. Since 1999, Mr. Putin and his messages to the Western world (or Atlantic one) became a somewhat we do nowadays call a political «meme». Russian President showed himself as an embodiment of Russian threat or Russian bear, whether he was riding naked to the waist on a horse or taking a speech on a Munich Security Conference. His image, his past, his words – all came to be a material for caricatures, conspiracy theories, investigations, but most of all – for a real concern about the threat of Russia, which became a headache for Western politicians.

His silence sometimes meant more than any words, but many times his address (like the Munich one in 2007) collected many responses all over the world due to its «aggressiveness». This year on March 1 Mr. Putin gave a speech to the Federal Assembly, and this speech, contained about 42 minutes talking of newest weapons and the range of their use, could be a serious ground for a new international scandal and Russia's accusations of aggressiveness. Nevertheless, did Western politicians receive this message and was the reaction of Western (North American and European) governments and mass media so tough, as it was supposed to be?

Review of the most topical problems of the American cities/ Обзор наиболее актуальных проблем американских городов

Urban development is one of the most discussed and popular issues of the modern humanitarian studies. As the sphere of our scientific interests includes the ways of regional and urban modernization in Russia, we were curious to get to know about most widespread problems of American cities. In search of this information, we discovered the existence of the National League of Cities. NLC’s Center for City Solutions provides research and analysis on key topics and trends important to cities and creative solutions to improve the quality of life in communities. Annually this Center edits the State of the Cities report that is a content analysis of mayors’ own words. It identifies top-level issues in 120 mayoral speeches. In our report, we analyze reasons for these problems and their effects on American domestic politics.

During its development, American social sphere has changed a lot. From institutional racism and slavery, the society smoothly came to liberalism, then to suffragism, then to post-movements and socially progressive views. Nowadays there is a variety of arguments about them, and a new community has appeared, that calls itself SJW — social justice warriors. Their views often include multiculturalism, feminazism, civil rights, etc. Is SJW a blessing for the USA, or a big problem, misbalancing society? This question demands careful research.

The United States foreign policy toward Venezuela: foundations and key directions/ Политика США в отношении Венесуэлы: основания и ключевые направления

The U.S. historically has had close relations with Venezuela, but friction in bilateral cooperation increased under the Chávez government and has intensified under the Maduro regime. The U.S. has no doubt that they are dealing with a dictatorship — with a failed state that was able for a long time to mask its true nature under pseudodemocratic pretenses. The Trump administration has taken a hard stance against Maduro's regime and does not exclude the possibility of a military option in regard to the situation in Venezuela. However, a military intervention would be an extraordinary escalation in response. The study examines the main directions of the U.S. foreign policy towards Venezuela, such as waging information and psychological warfare, promotion of political and economic isolation, interaction with the Venezuela's opposition, supporting of nearby neighbors, building a regional coalition, etc.

As well as politics, sport is filled with a variety of scandals that have taken place quite often in the history of the Olympic Games and other major events. International sporting events have a clear political nature: nation-states enter the stadium under their national anthem, represent their countries, and, in the case of victory, their rank increases. In other words, sport is an instrument of “soft power” if we use Joseph Nye’s term. Politicians and the public believed that the Games tested not just the strength and skills of the athletes, but the prosperity and vitality of the nation itself. High medal counts in the Games produced national exultation, while poor performances could provoke national self-doubt, social, economic and political recession. So, how does this mechanism work? In our research we will try to answer this question and give the audience precise description of the current situation.

The mass media in the USA: credibility crisis/ Средства массовой информации в США: кризис доверия

The mass media in the USA has played the role of one of the central pillars of democracy since the foundation of the country. However, nowadays more and more people doubt whether the press deliver its essential functions or not. The level of trust in the news media is relatively low. Such a situation turns Americans to alternative news sources. The USA is divided: Republicans and Trump voters, on one side, and Democrats and Clinton voters, on the other side, have drastically different views on the media and its role in politics. The latest presidential campaign and Trump’s presidency reinforced an old cleavage between various social and political groups and created a new one.

Although the rising role of non-governmental actors in world politics overviewed in the past decades has been continuously underlined by numerous scholars, the formalization of knowledge on the topic is still insufficient and fragmented and requires development of a specific approach to methodology and practice in the sphere. The study focuses on de-marginalizing the NGO scholarship in the theory of international relations and world politics examining the case of the United States foreign policy as a rich environment for multidimensional NGO activity and feedback. The pursued goal of the study is to determine the role, forms and features of participation of non-profit NGOs in the foreign policy of the United States and generalize practices in the field. The author analyzes legal and conceptual foundations of participation of non-profit NGOs in the U.S. foreign policy and its practical dimensions.

The report concerns the author's future dissertation, which is devoted to US policy in Latin America under Donald Trump. Latin America is a charming region without aggressive foreign policy without double standards. The author highlights two political leaders - V. Putin and D. Trump, who officially want to make their countries prospering. It is said that after V. Putin's public appearance on the 1st of March D. Trump is to take into account the Kremlin's peaceful opinion. The report is aimed at analysing the influence of the RF and the USA on Latin America. The author determines the role and the place of the LA direction in the system of US foreign policy. Finally, the author addresses the role of D. Trump's policy and possible future situation. The modern system of international affairs is very difficult to investigate. Because of the global crisis of trust and the enormous deficit of truth, the most honest, representative and independent method the author has chosen is an expert survey.

The project's aim is to gather information about lobbyist practice in the UK. Lobbyist organisations are extremely influential in the UK. British politicians and policy makers are traditionally deeply affiliated with business circles and involved in corruption schemes, which is proven by numerous evidence during almost yearly scandals. British anti-lobby laws used to be very meek until early 2014, when the Transparency of Lobbying, Non-party Campaigning and Trade Union Administration Act was implemented. The Registrar of Consultant Lobbyists was introduced in order to make lobbying more transparent and to limit lobbyist's activity. The act is widely criticised for lack of clarity and excessive regulation, moreover, it has several loopholes. Our goal is to sum general information about British lobbying practices, to analyse 2014's act, to highlight its weak spots and to offer our own solutions to the problem of political corruption.

It is no secret that Western philosophy strongly influenced the development of humanity in spiritual, political and cultural aspects. All Western philosophy is based on the teachings of Plato and Aristotle. Plato borrowed some elements of his theory from Pythagoras. However, few people know that Pythagoras traveled to India, where he found the basis for his teachings. Later, these ideas came to Europe and transformed there, taking into account local cultural peculiarities. Thus, Indian philosophy can be rightly considered to be a forming factor of Western philosophy, as many elements of the latter are borrowed from the Indians.

Forming an image of a modern British politician: a case study of Boris Johnson/
Формирование имиджа современного британского политика на примере фигуры
Бориса Джонсона

Today's politics is tightly connected with public relations. That is why a big role in it is played by the figure of the speaker. A great example of such a speaker is Boris Johnson. There are many articles in the mass media about his nontrivial statements and his personality in general, which demonstrates a complete demolition of official standards in politics. How did he come to power? What made his figure so popular in modern culture and politics? These questions, stated in the abstract, will be answered in the research.

The self-identification conflict of New Zealanders: a case study of the referendums on the change of the national flag/ Проблема самоидентификации у новозеландского населения на примере референдумов о смене государственного флага

The report is devoted to the conflict of self-identification of New Zealanders on the example of the referendums on the change of the national flag. This problem is relevant in the context of globalization. The aim of the work is to find out the causes of self-identification problems among the New Zealanders.

According to the stated problems, a following set of scientific methods has been applied:

- a survey method that reveals directly the causes of self-identification problems;
- a method of focus-group research in order to introduce the issue under consideration and to find out the audience's opinion on the stated problems.

The conducted study makes it possible to formulate the following conclusion: the self-identification problem of New Zealanders is primarily related to their controversial historical past, and this problem is quite acute.

French separatism in Canada: from the origin to the present / Французский сепаратизм в Канаде: от истоков до наших дней

Originated in the 18th century, Canadian separatism has become one of the most acute issues in Canada. The French have strongly demanded that they should enjoy the same rights and freedoms as the English-speaking population. This long-lasting contradiction has nearly turned into a so-called "silent" revolution. This report is an attempt to break down the origins of Canadian separatism, trace its dynamics up to the present and identify its consequences, which have manifested themselves in Canadian culture, politics and social relations.

What did Brexit give to the World/ Что Брекзит дал миру?

In my research, I am going to analyze in which way Brexit has influenced not only the present-day policy of Great Britain, but also the life of the world community. I try to draw on the native people's opinion in my assessment. The project gives a diagram made with the help of my Oxford friend. The main sources I used in this work were some British magazines, researched of NatCen and the opinion of Oxford citizens. The general result I could come to is that it was a prompt decision that did not radically change the life of the UK. At the same time, it was of great importance for the international relationships.

Metamodernism as a new cultural paradigm in the works of British artist Luke Turner/ Метамоде́рнизм как новая культурная парадигма в трудах британского художника Люка Тернера

The report is devoted to the problem of changes happening in the modern world passing from the state of postmodernism to the state of metamodernism in recent years. The topic of the report is relevant, as this is a new trend in culture, which has not yet received its due popularity. The purpose of the work is studying the resources devoted to metamodernism and disclosure of basic concepts to society. The object of the research is directly metamodernism itself. The subject of the research are questions concerning the definition of the value of metamodernism, its origin, founders and the reasons for the change of postmodernism. The resources on the stated issue are analyzed by the method of retrospection, by means of the descriptive method, the works of British artist Luke Turner, in particular, "Metamodernism: a brief introduction", "Metamodernist Manifesto", etc. are analyzed.

Harper Lee's 'To Kill a Mockingbird' and its impact on the US Civil Rights Movement/ Роман «Убить пересмешника» Харпер Ли и его влияние на Движение за гражданские права в Соединенных Штатах Америки

Harper Lee, the author of 'To Kill a Mockingbird', died at the age of 89 on the 19th of February, 2016. However, people all over the world still remember her name: almost sixty years after being published, 'To Kill a Mockingbird' is studied by every pupil in the USA while being tenderly loved by representatives of different nations and cultures. What makes this novel so unique? Considering the release of this novel in the framework of special historical events, we can see that ideas underlining the plot of 'To Kill a Mockingbird' had a huge impact on the American society of the 1960s (and this impact is still lasting). This report examines not only the socio-historical context in which this book was published, but also its specific influence on the Civil Rights Movement, racial prejudice and the fate of this novel. Should the Americans study 'To Kill the Mockingbird' at school, or the time of this novel has passed? This report reflects the results of finding answers to these questions.

The Indian caste system and its influence on modern society/ Кастовая система Индии и её влияние на современное общество

The report is concerned with the intricate combination of modern technological and economic achievements with the traditional political and social organization in India. The caste system, which was brought about by traditions, political needs and numerous circumstances and which divide people in four categories, is still working, causing a deep confrontation between these groups. The report tries to analyse how economic progress and modern tendencies cope with the traditions. These issues will be considered in my presentation with a view of how to balance the conflicting demands of their traditional and modern agendas.
